World Peace Day

In order to discuss the idea of peace in regards to America, it was important to talk about one of the most famous American civil rights activists, Martin Luther King. King was an active member of the American Civil Rights Movement and fought for the rights and equality of the black race. One of his important messages was to protest peacefully, as nothing accomplished with violence ever survives. The students were interested to learn about the history of racism in America, and what King did to fight against it. Also, the students were given a brief background in American history in order to set the scene for the current state of affairs.

Peace Day in 1st Grade

The students in 1st grade completed a few different activities to learn about Martin Luther King and the things he did to help create a more equal and peaceful United States. Teacher Carmen, who has been to the Civil Rights museum in Memphis, Tennessee, helped the students make white and brown hands in order to show the equality between two races, and how working together makes things better.

They also talked about their dreams and how to be peaceful at school.

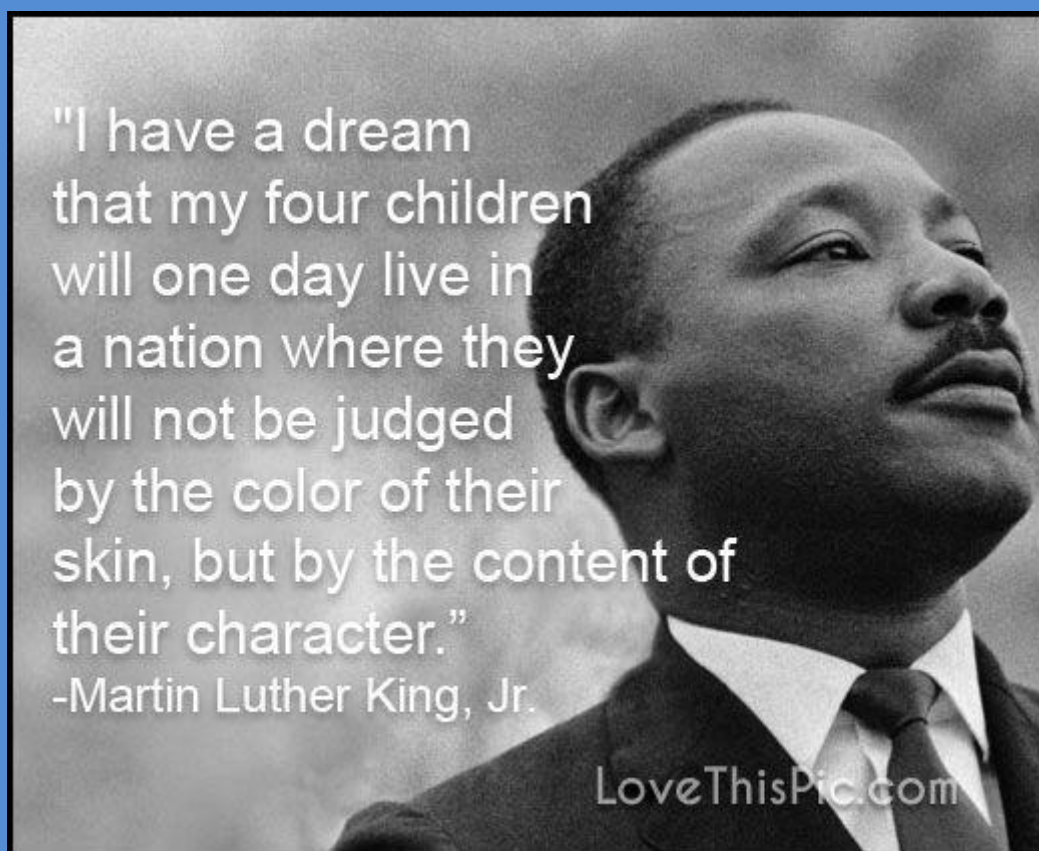

Peace Day in Kindergarten

In 5 year old Kindergarten, the students talked about Peace Day and how they could make the world a better place. They listened to the song "With My Own Hands" by Ben Harper, and completed a worksheet with coloring and some of the lyrics.

The reflection for January was also taken from the works of Martin Luther King. King's most famous speech, "I Have a Dream", was given in Washington in 1963 to thousands of people. Considered one of the greatest speeches in the history of the United States, King talked about the equality and rights that were obligatory to all citizens of the United States. The quote used for the reflection features King discussing his desire for his children to be seen for their merits, not the color of their skin. King was tragically assassinated a few years later, but his message still lives on today.

"Yo tengo el sueño de que mis cuatro hijos pequeños vivirán un día en una nación donde no serán juzgados por el color de piel sino por el contenido de su carácter."
